Vega (used, 1922) Whyte Laydie Style R tenor banjo ... This banjo, which bears the illustrious Whyte Laydie tone ring, has a generous head diameter of 11 7/8". This is the perfect head size for conversion to a Round Peak old time clawhammer banjo, and this is easily obtained by simply adding a 5-string replica neck. 1927 Vega Banjo Style R Whyte Laydie - Banjo - Gryphon ... This little Vega Whyte Laydie tenor is so clean and original that some customers looking on our banjos wall have assumed it was new instead of being 90 years old.

Jake Wildwood: 1920 Vega Fairbanks Whyte Laydie No. 2 ... 1920 Vega Fairbanks Whyte Laydie No. 2 Openback 5-String Banjo It's not every day one sees an original Vega 5-string from this era. Most "Vega" 5-strings of this time are reproduction necks mated to tenor-banjo rims bearing the same, coveted, Whyte Laydie ring. 1911 Vega Banjo Whyte Laydie No. 2 - Banjo - Gryphon ... An old tight hairline that was glued years ago and isn't going anywhere (probably from fitting the dowel stick). Original tuners and metal parts including tailpiece. Nicely fitted skin head. We're calling the case the original hardshell but we're not sure Vega was using these "bump" cases that early, the case may be later than the banjo. Vega Whyte Laydie No. 2 Plectrum Banjo (1923) Vega Whyte Laydie No. 2 Plectrum Banjo (1923) A nice early 20th century instrument, this Vega Whyte Laydie No. 2 Plectrum Banjo features a 2-piece maple neck and a maple rim with tortoise plastic binding.

1923 Vega Whyte Laydie No. 2 Banjo - Seeders Instruments This 1923 Vega Whyte Laydie rim features a faithful recreation of a No. 2 Griffin style neck. The large 12" Whyte Laydie rim is one of the most sought after of all original Vega rims from this era and the sound does not disappoint. Fairbanks (used, 1907) Whyte Laydie No. 2 - Mandolin ... The Whyte Laydie model was introduced in 1901 and then something really bad happened – in March of 1904 the Fairbanks factory had a ferocious fire (factually, a fearsome conflagration). Luckily, the Vega Banjo Company was located in the same town and took over production.
